About Music Licensing

Ordior works with you to commercialise your music via digital networks, partners and exclusive license contracts we hold. We work with some of the world's largest online music research and licensing firms. Ordior holds a number of exclusive partner agreements that provide our firm with a competitive edge that allows us to seek out and place our artists, labels and copyrights into lucrative FILM, TV, CABLE and general advertising license sales.

For more information on our exclusive partnerships and license agreements please refer to our website or email sales@ordior.com.au .

Our Mission

To commercialise your content and to take away the headache associated with licensing music for commercial productions.

We achieve this by saving you a significant amount of time by placing your music with over 100 leading music license specialists around the world. It has taken over 15 years to build these relationships and we bring them all to you so that we can work as a team to generate license sales.

We have exclusive partnerships with leading firms that allow us to use the power of the internet and our digital systems to maximise returns for our artists, labels and content owners.

About Music Copyright

Ordior takes the hassle out of music licensing and allows you to focus on what you do best. Our license team are highly experienced and we only work with market leaders in the placement of music around the globe.

About Music Copyright

Music copyright (and intellectual property) law is based on a combination of local territory legislation and various international agreements and has been tested successfully by the rights owners or their representatives in various courts around the world with stringent legal costs and penalties against those participating in copyright infringement and/or unauthorised copying, replication, transmissions and broadcasting. Rights owners do not hesitate in taking legal action where they believe their copyrights have been infringed.

Copyright is the right granted to the creators of original musical and artistic works to prevent other persons from copying and exploiting those works without first gaining permission. In addition, there may also be trademark and patent issues that have to be considered.

Permission to use a piece of music in a production (with a few exceptions as mentioned below) must be obtained from both the owner/controller of the musical composition - usually the 'music publisher' - and the owner/controller of the sound recording (and the underlying copyrights and intellectual property) - usually the 'record company'. An exception to this rule is when the music is out of copyright and in the 'public domain'. For example, the general term of copyright for musical work in the European Union is 70 years after the death of the last surviving composer.

However, in the USA the term is dependant on first publication, creation and registration factors (with various dates set as benchmarks and can vary, for example, from 70 years to 120 years) or where you would like to make your own recording of a piece of existing music. In some cases though, when you make your own recording, the music publisher may have to be made aware of this (depending on various factors such as territory, usage, change of lyric or structure) as the composer may insist that they approve the recording.
